ABSTRACT

In 1980, a study was conducted for the Association of Research Libraries (ARL) by Information Systems Consultants (ISCI) which led to the establishment of the ARL Microform Project. Based on a three-part survey, to which a total of 848 academic, government, public, and special libraries responded, the ISCI study covered: (1) general microform cataloging policy; (2) microform set holdings and bibliographic control, focusing particularly on cataloging of titles within microform sets; and (3) priorities for producing machine readable cataloging for titles within sets. The ARL Microform Project was established in 1981 to assist North American libraries, microform publishers, bibliographic cooperatives, and the Library of Congress (LC) in improving bibliographic access to titles in microform sets. The program's six main objectives focus on the areas of library cataloging, set processing, universal availability of records, publisher cataloging, preservation, and standards. The primary tool for accomplishing these objectives is an online database containing information (collected in the ISCI survey) on over 800 microform sets. This publication presents an overview of the ARL Microform Project; summaries of the three-part ISCI study; and two lists of microform set titles in alphabetical and numerical order (using four-digit set project codes). The ARL Microform Project

BACKGROUND

During the past two decades microforms have been added to North American library collections in vast quantities. More recently, while acquisition rates of books and serials in hardcopy format have declined, acquisition rates of microform publications have remained at high levels, and in consequence the microform holdings of many libraries currently equal or exceed volume counts of hardcopy books and serials. Although there are no statistics giving truly comparable holdings data--such as numbers of titles or pages of both hardcopy and microform publications -- it is plain nonetheless that microforms now constitute a very significant portion of overall library resources.

Despite the large numbers held, most microforms are not given nearly as much use as their hardcopy counterparts. Because they have generally not been provided with traditional forms of access, microform sets are particularly underused. These sets consist of out-of-print books, pamphlets, and other monographic items together with back runs of periodicals and other serials (many of them completed serials). Typically, the sets are assembled using standard bibliographies, such as Alfred W. Pollard's and Gilbert R. Redgrave's Short Title Catalog of English Books Printed Between 1475 and 1640. Many are based upon the special collections of major research libraries (e.g. Jeffersonian Americana from the Rare Books Library of the University of Virginia). Still others are works in series, such as Publications of English Local Record Societies, 1844-1957, or compilations resulting from original research, such as the set entitled History of Women which was assembled by the directors of two prominent women's history libraries.

In the absence of full, title-by-title cataloging, the contents of these sets have been almost entirely invisible to the majority of library users. Attempts to increase their visibility by means of annotated bibliographies, checklists, and guides have alleviated but not nearly overcome the problem, and indexes and abstracting services (which have been useful in providing access to serials and government publications in microform) have proven both unaffordable and impractical for use with this body of material.

Libraries that have provided individual cataloging for each title in a set have subsequently reported dramatic increases in use. Nonetheless, the task of providing catalog records for each title in all the sets of every library collection has, until recently, seemed impossibly difficult. Even where catalog card sets have been made available, for example by microform publishers, the difficulty and expense of adapting the cards to local needs seriously reduces their usefulness.

The evolution of on-line cataloging within large bibliographic cooperatives has created an opportunity for overcoming this impasse. Network cataloging provides the means for dividing the work load and sharing the work product so that microforms may be given full cataloging in accordance with widely-accepted standards in an extremely efficient and cost-effective manner. Moreover, this tool is available to publishers as well as libraries.

IR050353

Recognizing this fact, in 1976-1978 an ad hoc subcommittee, chaired by R. Grey Cole, within the American Library Association (ALA) developed a program for using cataloging networks to achieve bibliographic control of microforms. Drawing on the advice of representatives from libraries, micropublishers, grant-making organizations, and the U.S. Library of Congress (LC), the subcommittee produced a strategy that led, in 1979, to the creation of a planning study (conducted for the Association of Research Libraries (ARL)* by Richard Boss of Information Systems Consultants, Inc.), and this study led in turn to the establishment of an implementation program, the ARL Microform Project.

The project got underway in August 1981 with a $20,000 grant from the Council on Library Resources, to which a further grant of $53,000 from the Mellon Foundation was subsequently added. Jeffrey Heynen, President of Information Interchange Corp., is Project Coordinator. In conducting the project Heynen is assisted by ARL staff and an advisory committee composed of representatives of both ARL and non-ARL libraries, the major bibliographic cooperatives, micropublishers, and the Library of Congress.

OBJECTIVES

The project has been established to assist libraries (in the U.S. and Canada), microform publishers, bibliographic cooperatives, and the Library of Congress in improving bibliographic access to titles in microform sets. Key to its efforts is coordination to ensure that (a) duplication of effort is avoided, (b) the records which are created are available to all libraries in convenient forms, (c) the work is efficiently distributed so that no one institution bears a disproportionate load, and (d) North American standards are accepted and followed.

The project's goals emphasize building on existing resources and fostering cooperation among the institutions within the library and publishing communities and the bibliographic cooperatives to see that cataloging is done as thoroughly, efficiently, and economically as possible.

The program has six main objectives under the following headings:

1) library cataloging, 2) set processing, 3) universal availability of records, 4) publisher cataloging, 5) preservation, and 6) standards.

The primary tool for accomplishing these objectives is an on-line information clearinghouse. Based on survey responses from nearly 500 libraries in the United States and Canada, the clearinghouse contains data on over 800 microform sets. The data it contains will help libraries and microform publishers take advantage of the opportunities for shared-cataloging within the bibliogaphic cooperatives. In addition, it will enable them to make full use both of the emerging set-processing systems within the cooperatives.

* The Association of Research Libraries is an organization of the major research libraries in the United States and Canada. Members include the larger university libraries, the national libraries of both countries, and a number of public and special libraries having substantial research collections. There are presently 114 institutional members.

and of the expected establishment of agreements for exchange of records among the cooperatives and between them and the Library of Congress. Set processing is a set-processing procedure which permits records to be accessed set-by-set with automatic addition of local holdings symbols and call numbers. By means of set processing, the use that is made of records can be as efficient and cost-effective as current technology permits. Similarly, by means of inter-utility sharing and distribution of tapes by LC, records for microform sets need only be made once for them subsequently to be available to all libraries that may wish to use them.

The database through which the clearinghouse operates has three parts: 1) data on library policies regarding the cataloging of titles contained in microform sets, 2) data on holdings of and bibliographic control given to specific sets, and 3) data on priorities for cataloging and commitment to cooperative cataloging of specific sets.

Taking these in reverse order, data from the third segment of the database can be used to establish priorities for cataloging and for the creation of cooperative cataloging projects. Used in conjunction with the data in the second segment, it can also be used to distribute cataloging work so that all libraries that wish to benefit from microform cataloging may do so and so that no libraries are unfairly burdened. The second segment also provides information for taking fullest advantage of cataloging work that already has been done, for eliminating needless duplication of effort, and for supporting cataloging grant applications that are made to funding sources. In addition, data from the second and third parts may be used to stimulate publisher interest in generating machine-readable cataloging and to provide assistance in dealing with the bibliographic cooperatives regarding establishment of set-processing systems and the exchange of records.

Part two provides information on cataloging that has been and continues to be given to sets. This part currently contains data on 10,500 holdings of microform sets in the 500 responding libraries. It provides the following details: a) information on what sets or parts of sets are held and whether or not they continue to be received on subscription or standing order; b) whether local finding tools have been prepared for them; c) what sort of cataloging, if any, has been given to them, what proportion of their contents has been cataloged, whether cataloging activity continues; d) sources of cataloging copy, cataloging code used, and level of cataloging (full, minimum level, or brief); e) what proportion of the cataloging records, if any, has been entered into a cataloging database and whether such inputting of records continues on an ongoing basis; f) whether tapes of machine-readable records are held locally; and g) what databases the records have been entered into (e.g. the bibliographic cooperatives or in-house systems).

Part one of the database may be used to examine normal practices for libraries as a whole and for specific groups, such as the major research libraries, university libraries generally, or theological libraries. It may also be used to assist libraries in establishing uniform policies based on the experience of others.

The clearinghouse is available to all libraries and microform publishers that wish to take advantage of it. It is operated during normal business hours at the office of the Microform Project (address and phone number are given at the end of this report). Summaries of data in the survey database are also available from the project office.

The following listing highlights some results achieved under each of the project's six objectives.

1. Library Cataloging

Objective: To encourage libraries to fully catalog their new and existing microform holdings and to contribute the records they create to the bibliographic cooperatives and the Library of Congress in machine-readable form.

With the Coordinator's assistance, libraries continue to catalog microform sets with funding obtained under Title II-C of the U.S. Higher Education Act. The University of Utah completed Landmarks of Science I and is now cataloging Landmarks of Science II. Indiana University completed 19th-Century English and American Plays and is commencing Three Centuries of English and American Drama. Stanford University continues work on Early American Imprints, Series II and is now in the second five-year period (1806-1810).

Also with the Coordinator's help, the Library of Congress has, for the first time, begun to create machine-readable cataloging for its microform collections. Since early summer Micoform Reading Room staff have been creating minimum level records for sets held there. The LC Preservation Microfilming Office is soon to perform a like function for films created under the brittle books program.

More significantly, the Coordinator has continued to assist the Cooperative Cataloging of Microforms group (an informal group of participants in the OCLC bibliographic cooperative). This group has now established the first cooperative program for cataloging a microform set. The microfilm collection published by Research Publications based on the bibliography compiled by Lyle Wright entitled American Fiction is being cataloged by 13 cooperating libraries on OCLC. Work on standards and other administrative matters has been completed and cataloging is to commence shortly. The project is expected to take approximately a year and a half to complete.

2. Set Processing, or Profile Matching

Objective: To work with the bibliographic cooperatives and other organizations (such as microform publishers and LC) to develop mechanisms by which all records that are made for a given microform set can be obtained set-by-set, rather than simply title-by-title, and by which holding symbols and local designations -- such as call numbers -- can automatically be added to records that are obtained on a set-by-set basis.

Although records generated by libraries cataloging sets under Title II-C grants have been compiled for set processing by OCLC, the utility has not yet fully implemented the system. Within the next few months, however, libraries should be able to access the records on a set-by-set basis and have call numbers and local information automatically added to these records prior to their delivery either in card or tape form.

Stanford University has applied for funds under Title II-C so that the Research Libraries Group may create set-processing software for the RLIN shared-cataloging system. This is the second attempt to obtain grant money for this purpose and it is hoped that it will succeed this time.

The Coordinator has been providing assistance to OCLC, Stanford, and RLG in the accomplishment of these goals.

3. Universal Availability of Records

Objective: To pursue means by which records that are available within one bibliographic database (e.g. within the database of a utility or publisher, or in LC MARC) are available to all libraries.

RLG and OCLC have exchanged letters agreeing to share records that have been generated by libraries cataloging microforms under Title II-C. Both now have the capability of loading one another's tapes and it should not be long before actual exchange takes place.

4. Publisher Cataloging

Objective: To assist in making arrangements that enable microform publishers to create records in machine-readable form that meet library standards and that are as easily and widely available as those created by libraries.

University Microfilms International, which continues to produce machine-readable records for newly-produced microform publications, has announced that it will also provide retrospective cataloging for titles in units 33 to 39 of Early English Books, Series II (STC II, Wing). In the past six months one of the prime producers of microfilm sets, Research Publications Inc., has reversed its policy on cataloging. Where before it discouraged the generation of machine-readable records for titles it published (discouraging, for example, the use of cards it produced as copy for creation of such records), it now encourages libraries that wish to perform this function (e.g. the group cooperatively cataloging American Fiction).

Lost Cause Press has agreed to create catalog records that meet the requirements of AACR2 and it has committed itself to providing all useful support and encouragement to libraries that wish to create machine-readable cataloging of titles it produces.

The Microfilming Corporation of America has made an agreement with the Library of Congress by which MCA will provide LC with machine-readable cataloging for MCA sets. LC does not have the authority to redistribute these records, but may at some future time obtain this right. MCA continues to produce AACR2 machine-readable cataloging which can be purchased by libraries in tape form.

5. Standards

Objective: To promote the usefulness and exchangeability of machine-readable records by encouraging fullest possible use of the most widely accepted cataloging standards as well as of the cataloging practices that are being developed to implement these standards.

In the spring of 1982 the Coordinator worked with the Library of Congress on redefining and refining the 007 fixed field in MARC format for microforms. This work resulted in the issuance of a number of revisions in Update No. 7 to the MARC Formats for Bibliographic Data. Key among these changes was the redefinition of byte 11 so that it will henceforth function as a means of distinguishing among preservation masters, printing masters, and service copies.

6. Preservation

Objectives: (a) To encourage development and adoption of standard practices for cataloging and recording preservation microform masters, (b) to work toward the establishment of a North American machine-readable database which incorporates records for microform masters, and (c) to encourage contributions of records to this data base.

The Coordinator has been working closely with the Library of Congress in its conversion of the National Register of Microform Masters to machine-readable form for integration in the new National Union Catalog Register and Indexes. The LC conversion project is in its infancy. It will result in the production of three new tools: a National Union Catalog for books in microform, an NUC for serials in microform (apart from newspapers), and an NUC for newspapers in all formats. Software for creating these tools will not be uniform for some time: the books format will use existing NUC software and have the same format while the the serials and newspapers formats will use CONSER New Serial Titles software. Publications will be initially in hardcopy, later, like NUC, in COM microfiche.

In the fall of 1982, The National Endowment for the Humanities awarded the Association of Research Libraries a $64,000 grant to establish a preservation microfilming program within the Microform Project. Like the Microform Project's cataloging program, the new effort will emphasize building on existing resources and fostering cooperation among organizations and institutions that use microfilming for preservation. It is established with the understanding that coordination is necessary to avoid duplication of effort, establish a high level of production output, and assure that preservation microfilming is done as thoroughly, efficiently, and economically as possible.

The target group for the new program includes libraries and historical societies in North America, microform publishers, library consortia, and the bibliographic cooperatives. It encompasses preservation microfilming of books and serials but not manuscripts or other archival materials.

Following the procedures employed for developing the Microform Project in 1979-81, the Microform Project Coordinator will first conduct a detailed investigation of preservation microfilming needs, then formulate a plan of action, and thirdly, carry out the plan. The investigation phase of the program will include interviews with preservation specialists and a mail survey concerning current microfilming practices and priorities for future developments. The plan of action will be drafted upon evaluation of survey results and this draft will be modified after further interviews, consultation with an advisory group, and review by individual members of the preservation community. A report on the investigation and the resulting plan of action will be published by ARL.

In conducting the program, the Coordinator will be assisted by ARL staff; by Pamela Darling, a highly-respected preservation consultant; and by the existing Microform Project Advisory Committee. He will also be aided by a preservation advisory committee composed of preservation and microfilming specialists including individuals from major preservation programs and from individual libraries that are engaged in preservation microfilming on a large scale.

The program commenced in October 1982 and will continue on a part-time basis until late-spring 1984.

Its chief goals as as follows:

1. the establishment of cooperative preservation microfilming projects and the stimulation of new or expanded filming programs in individual libraries, historical societies, and microform publishing organizations.

2. the widespread observance of existing production and storage standards and, if needed, the development of new ones.

3. the improvement of existing bibliographic tools -- and, if needed, the development of new ones -- to insure that information concerning books and serials that have been filmed, that need to be filmed, and that are planned for filming is in machine-readable form and accessible through one or more databases.

4. the collection and dissemination of information (e.g., statistical and cost data) for the administration of preservation microfilming programs.

Summary of Part II of the Microform Project Survey

Holdings and Bibliographic Control Data

Report for the 70 Microform Sets That Were Given Highest Priority for Cataloging in Part III of the Survey

Response Data for Libraries That Reported the Creation of Machine-Readable Records for these Sets and the Entering of Any of the Records Into a Cataloging Database

This report is based on analysis of those responses to Part II of the ARL Microform Project Survey received prior to the follow up mailing of November 1982. Part II is a table on which respondents indicate their holdings of microform sets and give data on any bibliographic control with which they may have provided these sets. The focus is on cataloging of titles within sets.

The pre-follow up database for Part II contains entries for 10,062 library holdings of microform sets. For the 70 sets given highest priority for cataloging in Part III of the survey, there are 4,472 holdings listed in responses to Part II. Of the 70 sets, 55 show entry of at least some catalog records into a cataloging data base.

The report is arranged in numerical order by the four-digit code assigned to each set and within that order it is alphabetical by the NUC code of responding libraries. A code-title cross reference table follows the data listing. Column headings in the report are for the most part self-explanatory. Local finding tools are defined as any tools other than catalog records for titles within a set. Although not all respondents did so, they were asked to interpret "Have Cataloged Titles in Set" as meaning "Have Cataloged All Titles That Set Contains." Full cataloging is defined as cataloging in accordance with the responding library's policy for full cataloging. Minimimum level cataloging is cataloging in accordance with the national level minimum level standard for bibliographic records. Brief cataloging is any cataloging that is neither full nor minimum level. Entries under the heading "Comments?" indicate whether or not respondents added comments to the data they gave for each set. Most of these comments give information that modifies a response. The most common one is a note on holdings where only part of a set is held.

Association of Research Libraries Microform Project

Summary of Part III of the Microform Project Survey

Microform Sets Given Highest Priority for Cataloging by Survey Respondents

This report is based on analysis of all responses to Part III the ARL Microform Project Survey received prior to the follow-up mailing made in November. Part III contains both respondents' priorities for producing machine-readable cataloging for titles within microform sets and indication of their interest in, or commitment to cooperative cataloging of sets. Before the follow-up mailing the project office received 237 Part III response forms having priority/cooperative-cataloging data. This report focuses on the 50 sets that were given highest priority by responding libraries. It also includes eight sets that were given ratings by a significant number of libraries though the ratings themselves were lower than the top 50 and it includes a further 12 sets for which a significant number of respondents showed interest in cooperative cataloging.

Explanation of table column headings: Rank = Sequence by amount in Total column. Items 1-50 are the 50 highest-rated sets. Items 51-58 are additional sets that were given ratings by eight or more libraries. Items 59-70 are still further sets for which three or more libraries indicated interest in or commitment to cooperative cataloging. Total = Sum of ratings given set. (Ratings were given on a scale of one to five with five as highest rating). Count = Number of libraries that gave ratings to set. Coop Libs = Number of libraries that indicated interest in or commitment to cooperative cataloging of set. Code = Four-digit code number assigned to set. Title = Title given set by publisher or provided by Suzanne Dodson (compiler of MICROFORM RESEARCH COLLECTIONS, A Guide). Abbreviation of publisher's name, in parentheses, follows title.

ARL Microform Project - Titles of Microform Sets

Alphabetical Listing

This list has three sources: 1) research done by Suzanne Cates Dodson for the forthcoming second edition of her book, Microform Research Collections: A Guide (to be published by Microform Review, Inc, Westport, CT); 2) additions and corrections made by microform publishers; and 3) further additions provided by libraries that have responded to the Microform Project survey on microform sets.

Although some sets of manuscripts (including oral histories) and some sets of continuing serials are included, the focus is on sets made up of monographs and completed serials. Similarly, although the term "sets" is intended to be synonymous with "multi-title collections," a number of works in series are present. Further, despite the orientation of the Microform Project toward the cataloging of titles in sets, a number of large, fully indexed sets that sources cited are also listed --these include, for example, ERIC and the Congressional Information Service programs.

The list is not intended to be exhaustive, indeed, could not be exhaustive in view of uncertainties about set titles discussed briefly below. It is, however, as inclusive as resources permitted.

The form of title used in the list is that provided by the microform publisher or the library that supplied the title. As Ms. Dodson points out in the first edition of the Guide, many sets are difficult to identify by title alone. For example, those whose titles are based on the subject area of the works they contain are sometimes rather loosely cited. Similarly, the titles of a substantial number of sets refer to the titles or names of compilers of bibliographies on which the sets are based. Others refer to the names of library collections from which they have been drawn. In these cases unique, "authoritative" titles are frequently difficult to establish. Further confusion results from the practices of building large sets from numerous smaller ones and from making subsets from large ones. The titles of such sets can be misleading when (as occasionally happens) the dependent relationships are not explained.

Publishers often act as jobbers for one another, and since promotional material does not always cite the publisher to which jobbered sets belong, the same set can seem to be a number of different publications having identical titles. Publishers also occasionally sell sets to one another, and on acquiring a new "imprint" a set can appear to be a new publication when it is not.

Set titles that have been contributed by libraries are often in a form different from that used by the publisher.

To assist in the process of conclusively identifying a set, an abbreviated form of the publisher's name, enclosed in parentheses, accompanies each title in the list that follows. Occasionally two names appear when a set has shifted from one publisher to another, but not in every instance where this has occured. An empty pair of parentheses indicates an unknown publisher. The number following title and publisher is the four-digit code assigned for identification purposes as part of the Microform Project survey. "See" references have been provided in some cases, but not systematically.
